

David J. Hass, MD

INCOMING PRESIDENT

Dr. Hass attended medical school at the Weill Medical College of Cornell University, followed by residency training at the Hospital of the University of Pennsylvania, and Gastroenterology and Hepatology fellowship training at Montefiore Medical Center/Albert Einstein College of Medicine in the Bronx, NY.

He currently serves as medical director of PACT Gastroenterology Center, a partner of Hartford HealthCare, and is on the clinical faculty at the Yale University School of Medicine as an Associate Clinical Professor, combining a unique hybrid of private practice and clinical education. He is the Director of Endoscopy at Yale New Haven Hospital – Saint Raphael Campus and actively involved in the fellowship training program at Yale.

He has distinct interest in diseases of the small bowel and is very interested in educating both patients and clinicians about the usefulness of complementary and alternative therapies, as well as the importance of careful regulation of CAM therapies.

Dr. Hass has a strong interest in physician advocacy and has served as President of the New Haven County Medical Association and has served as a member of the American College of Gastroenterology Legislative and Public Policy Council, the ACG Practice Management Committee, and is the current ACG Governor for the State of Connecticut.

He also serves as the Director of the CSMS/Yale New Haven Hospital Young Physicians' Leadership Curriculum, a program aimed at educating tomorrow's physicians about effective leadership, emotional intelligence, organizational behavior, and other critical leadership skills so as to enable these young colleagues to advocate more effectively for patients, colleagues, and each other.
